REPORT.

Dear Classmates:

In accordance with the custom of our College, I have the pleasure of submitting to you my Second Class Report, on this, the first, Triennial Anniversary of our graduation. The three years that have passed, you will observe, have been occupied by most of us in establishing ourselves in the various occupations which we have chosen to pursue. And though we started evenly in the mighty race which we must run where the wide world forms the course, and the stakes are honor, fame, wealth and happiness, though we have run but three heats, still you will find scarcely two are in a like position on the track. Most of us still remain bachelors, that wearisome condition of humanity, as some one ironically calls it. Others are married, and some of their familiar old faces can be seen again in the little ones that prattle around their firesides. And here it is proper for me to state that we have had fewer marriages and more children, in the same time, than any class for many years. Another noticeable thing is, that out of those who graduated more than one-third are lawyers, showing the earnest desire on the part of many of the class to help people out of their difficulties.

I am sorry that more attention has not been paid to the Class Fund. The first instalment was due in 1868, when we graduated, and yet there are some of you who have not as yet paid one cent of what you owe. The fund is very much smaller than that of any other recent class, and this year the expenses will be so large that the interest cannot meet them, and a portion of the principal must be used. Where the money has not been paid as due, by the advice of some of the Class, I have charged interest, as it seems unjust that the Class should suffer any loss from the carelessness or neglect of any individual to pay his instalment when it is due. The Fund should not be made to suffer in this way, and if the man does not choose to pay his money when it is due, he should consider it as a loan to him, from the Fund, and pay interest on it accordingly.

I hope each of you will give me the pleasure of hearing from you, at least once a year, as there are many who seek information from me as to the Class, and if by reason of the neglect of any one to write, I am unable to give his address, some one, not acquainted with him, might imagine as the cause of his silence that he was engaged in some dishonorable business, which he was anxious to conceal. I hope that such is not the case, although two of the Class have studiously avoided answering my circulars. W. H. King, at one time a member of the Class, writes that he prefers to be considered as belonging to '67, and Clifford, who was with us Freshman year, threatens me with a lawsuit in case I say anything about him: so I omit these names from my list of the Class.

Fortune seems to have smiled on us all. Many an honorable record will be found on the pages that come after. But two of our number are gone. Let us hope that as the years roll on, and our dwindling band grows smaller, as we stop to shed a silent tear o'er the grave of the dead, may our old Alma Mater ever be able to glance on the record of her boys with as proud an eye as she can this year on the Class of '68.

Faithfully your friend,

CHARLES HARRIS PHELPS.

JOHN PICKERING PUTNAM. Born in Boston, Mass., 3d April, 1847.

Studied in Boston until 7th November, 1869, when he sailed for England, with intention, on the part of his family, that he should travel for pleasure through Europe, for seven or eight months. After a few days in England, however, to use his own words: "I struck out immediately for Paris, and plunged with unrelenting fervor into the study of Architecture. Entered a school on the 7th of December, and set to work to prepare myself for the examinations of the Imperial Ecole des Beaux Arts, considering that my travels would be far more useful to me in every way after studying there for a year or two. I found plenty to do to keep me hard at work until the 1st of April, when the examinations commenced—especially as everything had to be done in French. There are eight examinations. The first three days was the course of Dessin, five hours each day. There were one hundred and seventy aspirants for admission. The second examination was in Architecture. This lasts one day of twelve hours. We are shut up in great halls from 9 A. M. to 9 P. M., with nothing but our architectural instruments, while the Professor marches up and down to keep things as quiet and civilized as possible. You had better believe there was some pretty tall hurrying done that day: every man worked for his life. Sparks actually flew from our compasses, as we had to invent, draw, and paint in this time the plan, elevation and section of the subject given out to us. After these two examinations were over, there was an interval of three days, during which judgment was passed on what had been done, and seventy unfortunate architects were kicked out. The remaining one hundred were then examined in Mathematics, and then orally in Geometry, Geometry Descriptive, Algebra, Demonstrative Arithmetic, and Universal History, each aspirant being examined separately, so that the whole extended over some twenty days, making a much harder thing of it than I had expected, and it was with feelings of no small gratification that I found that my efforts had at last been crowned with success. About fifty only were received. The one hundred and seventy aspirants were apparently quite old, judging from the long beards waving about in the crowd, and many of them had applied for admission two or three times before." His studies in Paris were interrupted by the war: during which he was twice arrested as a Prussian spy, on account of sketching in the streets. After travelling through Germany, he went to Berlin, and entered the Bau Academie, where he still remains.

After that he was Professor of Mathematics in St Paul's College, at Palmyra, Missouri. Owing to ill-health he was compelled to seek a more genial clime in February last, and accordingly "my face," to quote from his letter, "was directed to Texas, which I found a land of sun and flowers, while you were still enveloped in the intense cold of last Winter. I had a very extensive tour, with Bishop Grigg, through Western and Southern Texas, from Galveston as far as the Gulf, which we met at Indianola; thence coastwise, to Corpus Christi, and back to Matagorda and Galveston. Texas has a bad name, but I never should have known that I was here, for the hospitality of the people was great, and I never found a necessity to carry arms to protect myself. I never saw a Ku-Klux, and I can assure you that thieves, and desperadoes meet with their deserved fate. Use your influence ever to restore to their privileges men, who were a brave foe, but who accept their defeat, and yet are not satisfied that a group of men, who own nothing, and who never have had any character, should destroy every hope of re-establishing their wealth, by a taxation which consumes even the little capital which remained in the land."
